Train to Gain Helps Businesses of all Sizes Fight Recession

-Train to Gain helps Northamptonshire business grow-

Business leaders have hailed the Government's flagship Train to Gain programme, saying it has helped them provide vital training to their staff during the downturn.

Both large and small businesses have reaped the benefits of Government funded training support, which is backed up by figures released today by the Learning and Skills Council.

In a survey of employers who use the training initiative, 80 per cent said they were likely to recommend Train to Gain to other employers and use it again themselves. A significant number of employers (41 per cent) also said Train to Gain had helped them cope with the recession.

One East Midlands company who has benefited from the Train to Gain service is Northamptonshire based Crane Plastics who make plastic components for the food industry.

The company's balance sheet was hit when a customer went into liquidation, owing Crane Plastics more than £8,000. But partners Craig Burdon and Hugh Sterling recognised the huge potential of the customer's product, Testick, a small plastic and metal device which food manufacturers can use to test metal sensors on production lines.

Crane Plastics acquired the Testick business and moved staff from the failed business into their Northampton premises. A sales manager was recruited in an attempt to help the product reach its full potential and Business Link introduced the company to the Train to Gain service in order to provide skills advice and support.

Craig Burdon, said: “Our adviser looked at our organisation’s skills needs, matching it against support that was fully or part-funded by the Train to Gain service - such as NVQs, Apprenticeships and the Leadership & Management programme. This approach has ensured the company is in a stronger position to develop both its technical and management skills, which in turn supports our continued growth.

Skills Minister Kevin Brennan said: “These reports show that businesses value the change to offer staff high quality training, that they otherwise may not have been able to, through Train to Gain.

“Thousands of businesses and tens of thousands of employees have benefited from the improved skills delivered by our Train to Gain programme. This is crucial for the long term strength of the economy and the ability of individuals to fulfil their potential.

“The fact that so many learners and employers understand how vital skills and training can be shows how effective our support has been during difficult economic times. We remain committed to ensuring that as many people as possible get the skills they need to benefit from the opportunities of growth.”

Geoff Russell, Chief Executive of the LSC, said: “This report shows that businesses have used Train to Gain to equip their employees with vital skills that have had a direct impact on their productivity. This is a critical business benefit in tough economic times.

“Workplace training has never been more responsive or flexible to the needs of employers and it is gratifying that more employers recognise the benefits of training their staff so they have a skilled workforce, ready for the upturn. The direct benefit to their business productivity and their employees is clear.”

The employer report also found:

- Train to Gain continues to perform highly in encouraging employers to engage with training and development of staff.
- Employers have been able to train more staff and give them access to higher quality qualifications than they would have done otherwise.

- A high number of employers said Train to Gain helped them engage in training and development of their staff.

The Learner report found:

- Employees' satisfaction with Train to Gain remained high with more than 90 per cent pleased with their training.
- Nearly 90 per cent of learners said they hoped to get a qualification at the end of their training, with 85 per cent looking for skills that would look good in the future and improved their ability to do their job.
- The recession is having a positive impact on employee attitudes towards training making them keen to boost their chances in an unpredictable economic climate.

The Train to Gain evaluation report follows the recent "Going for Growth" and "Skills for Growth" strategies. These detail how the Government is continuing to invest in skills in order to help drive economic growth and productivity as the country emerges from recession.

2. Managed by the Learning and Skills Council (LSC), Train to Gain is the Government's flagship service to support employers in England, of all sizes, and in all sectors, to improve the skills of their employees, unlock talent and drive improved business performance. A key element of Train to Gain are skills brokers who offer employers impartial advice and at no cost, helping them to find the best training solution from high-quality and responsive training.
3. Train to Gain was launched in 2006. Train to Gain is now part of the Solutions for Business portfolio - a streamlined suite of government-funded support products for businesses accessible via Business Link.
 - Train to Gain is key to implementing the plans in Skills for Growth and the Government's ambitions to focus more of the skills budget on the areas of the economy which can do most to drive growth and jobs. Train to Gain offers eligible employers funding for Skills for Life, first full qualifications at work mainly at levels 2 and 3, and leadership and management training for SMEs.

- Through the Business Link and providers' brokerage services, employers can access advice about how to improve the skills of their employees and the productivity of their business.
4. The Department for Business, Innovation and Skills published Skills for Growth – the National Skills Strategy in November 2009, which sets out an ambitious vision for giving people and businesses the skills they need to help drive economic growth. The Government will create a modern class of technicians through a dramatic expansion of advanced apprenticeships, creating 35,000 new places over the next two years.
