Date of issue X October 2008

Company bosses in Plymouth who are having training nightmares are being encouraged this Halloween to seek help from Train to Gain to stop the horror continuing!

With the credit crunch putting more pressure on companies to reduce costs and retain customers Train to Gain can help by providing staff with effective training.

Kitley House Hotel in Yealmpton, near Plymouth have eased their nightmare by talking to Train to Gain, which offers businesses impartial advice on their skills requirements; matching training needs of companies with training providers, sourcing potential funding and grants and finding courses that suit them and their employees.

The hotel has launched training programs in many areas of the business including the kitchen, restaurant, bar and front office. At present two members of staff are also completing Apprenticeships in Catering. Training has had a positive impact on the motivation of the employees as each individual works towards excellence in customer service.

Andrew Huckerby from Kitley House Hotel said: "For us, like many other companies, trying to research the right training and to source a suitable provider is really difficult and sometimes it can keep you awake at night! Luckily, Train to Gain was able to help us and has put us on the right track. Because we didn't spend lots of time trying to research the training ourselves it has freed us up to concentrate on the running our business and be more effective as a company. It's already made a huge difference and no doubt it will continue to do so."

Chris Minett, Skills Development Director at Train to Gain, said: “We were set up to help organisations make informed decisions about training, so that they can help staff enhance their skills and boost productivity. We are helping hundreds of businesses in Plymouth stop their training nightmares and we are here to help many more.”
